CALL FOR NOMINATIONS

APS RISING STARS

DEADLINE: SEPTEMBER 30, 2015

The APS Board of Directors is pleased to announce the establishment of the Rising Star designation for outstanding psychological scientists in the earliest stages of their research career post-PhD. Drawing its name from an Observer editorial series that featured exemplars of the exciting work being done by the field’s newest researchers, this designation recognizes researchers whose innovative work has already advanced the field and signals great potential for their continued contributions.

Individuals being considered for Rising Star designation will be evaluated for their promise of excellence in research based on the following criteria:

- significant publications
- significant recognitions
- significant discoveries, methodological innovations, or theoretical or empirical contributions
- work with potentially broad impact

Nominations of candidates from diverse gender, racial, ethnic and cultural backgrounds are strongly encouraged.

Nomination information:
www.psychologicalscience.org/rising-stars

2015 RISING STARS COMMITTEE

Cross-Cutting Theme

Milliseconds to Decades: Development as a Level of Analysis

Tick-tock, tick-tock — our bodies, thoughts, feelings, and behaviors evolve continuously across time. Can trajectories of change say more than a single snapshot about who we are and where we’re going? Find out in this cross-cutting theme program on the value of studying development over time in psychological research. What development happens in the “blink of an eye,” and what can we learn from behavior as it unfolds across the years?

Following Single Molecules of mRNA in Living Neural Tissue

Robert H. Singer
Albert Einstein College of Medicine

We used imaging to observe movements of endogenous mRNA in living neural tissues from a transgenic mouse, where mRNAs are labeled by a fluorescent binding protein.

mRNAs respond to synaptic stimulation of dendritic spines by localizing and translating there, enhancing and strengthening the spine, which leads to learning and memory.

Temporal Interpersonal Emotion Systems: The TIES That Form Relationships

Emily Butler
University of Arizona

Emotions are fundamentally interpersonal, dynamic, and central to well-being. This talk will review theory, mathematical modeling approaches, and empirical findings regarding the temporal dynamics and regulatory processes that emerge between partners in close relationships, with an emphasis on their relevance for health factors such as smoking and body weight.

Adolescence as a Sensitive Period for Social Brain Development

Sarah-Jayne Blakemore
University College London, United Kingdom

Adolescence is a period of formative biological and social transition. Social cognitive processes involved in navigating an increasingly complex social world continue to develop throughout adolescence. Areas of the social brain undergo both structural changes and functional reorganization during adolescence, possibly reflecting a sensitive period for adapting to one’s social environment.

Trajectories of Resilience: The Heterogeneity of Long-Term Responses to Potential Trauma

George A. Bonanno
Teachers College, Columbia University

Advances in latent trajectory modeling have identified a resilient trajectory of stable health as the most common long-term outcome. This talk will describe research on a range of aversive events including terrorist disaster, military combat, and spinal-cord injury and consider how these trajectories vary across development and type of stressor event.

Childhood Cognitive Ability and Life Outcomes in Older Age

Ian J. Deary
The University of Edinburgh, United Kingdom

Findings are presented from the new follow-up studies of the Scottish Mental Survey 1947: the 6-day and 36-day samples. They provided cognitive, sociological, and health data in early life and were followed up in older age. Associations are described between childhood factors and health and cognitive ability in older age.

Deary will deliver his APS Award Address on Saturday, May 23 at 11:00 AM. See page 93 for details.

Cross-Cutting Theme

‘Give Me Your Tired, Your Poor’: Psychological Science and Immigration

12:30 PM – 12:55 PM

The Role of Psychological Science in Policy and Practice Affecting Undocumented Immigrants and Their Children

Hirokazu Yoshikawa
New York University

Psychological science can play an important role in bringing evidence to policymakers and practitioners concerning how undocumented status affects adults, parents, children, and youth. This presentation will review the current evidence on undocumented status and its effects across the life span and from a multigenerational perspective. Implications for future research, practice, and policy will be discussed.

1:00 PM – 1:25 PM

Insights From Immigrant Cultures: Benefits for Relationships and Health

Belinda Campos
University of California, Irvine

What can we learn from the cultures that immigrants bring to the U.S.? This talk will highlight findings that suggest immigrant cultural values are associated with benefits for relationship quality and have implications for health. In the future, researchers may start asking, “How can we preserve immigrant customs and values?”

1:30 PM – 1:55 PM

Immigrants at Work: Challenges and Opportunities

Gilad Chen
University of Maryland, College Park

Despite strong reliance worldwide on migrant workers across many jobs, little is known about the unique psychological experiences of immigrants in work and organizational settings. Building on theories and research on work and cultural adjustment, this talk will discuss different psychological factors that can prevent or facilitate immigrants’ work and career success.

2:10 PM – 2:35 PM

Immigration, Cultural Transition, and a Truly Human Psychological Science

David Rollock
Purdue University

Immigration poses challenges and opportunities for broadening theory, improving research, and enhancing applications of psychological science. This presentation will offer an overview of key methodological and content issues associated with cultural transition, including illustrations from recent work on measurement equivalence, intergenerational cultural conflict, and mental health implications of goals and resources for intercultural contact.

2:40 PM – 3:05 PM

Trajectories of Performance: Understanding the Role of Ecologies of Access

Carola Suárez-Orozco
University of California, Los Angeles

The process of migration presents both challenges and opportunities for immigrant youth. This talk will present key findings drawing on a 5-year longitudinal, mixed-methods, exploratory study of 400 newcomer immigrant adolescents from Central America, China, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, and Mexico. Latent class growth curve analysis reveals that although some newcomer students perform at high or improving levels over time, the majority show diminishing performance. Multinomial logistic regressions identify significant group differences in academic trajectories, particularly between the high-achieving youth and the other groups. Case studies shed light on the cumulative developmental challenges immigrant students encounter as they adjust to their new settings.

‘Give Me Your Tired, Your Poor’ Theme Posters
(Poster Session VIII)

4:00 PM – 4:50 PM
APS Exhibit Hall-Westside Ballroom
SETUP: 3:50 PM

The United States is a nation of immigrants, so there is special interest in studying the psychological experience of coming to a new country and starting a new life. How do immigrants learn new languages, customs, and values? What factors predict whether immigrants thrive or languish? This cross-cutting theme program examines issues ranging from socialization in immigrant families to the psychology of work in immigrants’ lives.

Lessons Learned From Split-Brain Research

Michael S. Gazzaniga
University of California, Santa Barbara

The totality of insights gleaned from studying patients undergoing surgical disconnection of their two brain halves will be presented. From discovering basic and specific neural networks dedicated to sensory, motor, and cognitive processes to conceptualizing unique capacities of the left and right brain, split-brain patients have provided a continuous source of knowledge about how our mental lives are organized in the brain. The patients' vigorous participation in this 50-year research program will be saluted.

Michael Gazzaniga will sign copies of his book, Tales From Both Sides of the Brain: A Life in Neuroscience, immediately following his award address.

Development, Pathology, and Stigma: The ADHD Explosion as a Case Example

CLINICAL

Stephen P. Hinshaw
University of California, Berkeley

Which processes, across development, lead to thriving versus impairment? Taking examples from impulse control and mood disorders, I illustrate principles of developmental psychopathology and reveal how the stigmatization of mental illness compounds efforts to promote resilience. Efforts to overcome risk will require efforts spanning multiple levels of analysis and intervention.

Coming to Terms With Fear and Anxiety

Joseph E. LeDoux
New York University

Research on Pavlovian fear conditioning has been very successful in revealing what has come to be called the “fear system” of the brain. The field has now matured to the point where a sharper conceptualization of what is being studied could be very useful as we go forward. Terms like “fear conditioning” and “fear system” blur the distinction between processes that give rise to conscious feelings of fear and non-conscious processes that control defense responses elicited by threats. These processes interact but are not the same. This is an important distinction because symptoms based on conscious and non-conscious processes may be vulnerable to different predisposing factors and may also be treatable with different approaches in people who suffer from uncontrolled fear or anxiety. Using terms that respect the distinction will help focus future animal research on brain circuits that detect and respond to threats, and should also help clarify the implications of this work for understanding how normal and pathological feelings of fear come about in the human brain.

Self-Regulation Across Individuals and Development

GENERAL

CHAIR: Nancy Eisenberg, APS President
Arizona State University

Individual differences in self-regulation emerge in a developmental context and vary as a function of both biological and social processes. In this symposium, participants will discuss conceptual perspectives and empirical findings pertaining to the emergence of or change in self-regulation (and/or executive functioning) as a function of stress-response physiology, oxytocin, neurobiology, meta-cognitive strategies, and socialization and other contextual factors (e.g., the physical environment). The speakers’ work reflects the multi-method and often longitudinal approaches that characterize cutting-edge psychological science regarding the development of self-regulatory capacities.
