

TREATMENT AND PREVENTION OF DEPRESSION

Steven D. Hollon,¹ Michael E. Thase,² and John C. Markowitz³

¹Vanderbilt University, ²University of Pittsburgh Medical Center and Western Psychiatric Institute and Clinic, and ³Weill Medical College of Cornell University and New York State Psychiatric Institute

Project Editor: Susan Mineka

About the Authors

Steven D. Hollon is Professor of Psychology at Vanderbilt University. He received his Ph.D. in psychology from the Florida State University in 1977. He is an active clinical investigator whose research focuses on the nature and treatment of depression. A past president of the Association for Behavior Therapy and a Litchfield Lecturer at Oxford University, he is a former editor of the journal Cognitive Therapy and Research and a former associate editor of the Journal of Abnormal Psychology. He is a strong proponent of an empirical approach to the study of psychotherapy and was a member of the American Psychological Association's Task Force for the Development of Guidelines for Determining Treatment Efficacy.

Michael E. Thase is Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center and the Western Psychiatric Institute and Clinic (WPIC). He obtained his medical degree at Ohio State University in 1979 and served as a resident and fellow at WPIC before joining the university faculty in 1983. He has directed the Depression Treatment and Research Program at WPIC since its inception in 1987 and is now the Chief of Adult Academic Psychiatry. He is an active clinical investigator whose research focuses on the assessment and treatment of mood disorders. He has written numerous scientific articles and chapters (as well as seven books), and is the Editor-in-Chief of the journal Psychopharmacology Bulletin. A fellow of the American Psychiatric Association, he has received numerous honors in his field, including the Marie Eldredge Award from the American Psychiatric Association.

John C. Markowitz is Associate Professor of Psychiatry at Weill Medical College of Cornell University, Lecturer in Psychiatry at Columbia University College of Physicians & Surgeons, and Research Psychiatrist at the New York State Psychiatric Institute in New York City. He received his M.D. from Columbia University and served his residency at the Payne Whitney Clinic in New York City. He studies psychotherapy and pharmacotherapy of mood and anxiety disorders, especially interpersonal psychotherapy, and was trained in the latter by the late Gerald L. Klerman. He also trained in cognitive behavioral therapy at the Beck Institute in Philadelphia. He is the author of Interpersonal Psychotherapy for Dysthymic Disorder (American Psychiatric Press, 1998) and coauthor of Comprehensive Guide to Interpersonal Psychotherapy (with Klerman and Myrna M. Weissman; Basic Books, 2000), and has published widely on psychotherapy research.