

Celebrating a Death: Ugly, Maybe, but Only Human

May 06, 2011

The New York Times:

Some Americans celebrated the killing of Osama bin Laden loudly, with chanting and frat-party revelry in the streets. Others were appalled — not by the killing, but by the celebrations.

It was appropriate to go after Bin Laden, just to try to cut the head off that serpent, but I don't think it's decent to celebrate a killing like that," said George Horwitz, a retired meat cutter and Army veteran in Bynum, N.C.

Read the whole story: The New York Times