

Getting Some 'Me' Time: Why Millennials Are So Individualistic

October 23, 2014

NPR:

They are a class of self-centered, self-absorbed, selfie-snapping 20-somethings. This is how many critics have come to define the millennial generation.

But hold on, isn't this what was said about every generation when it was young? Minus the selfies of course.

Some scholars argue that millennials aren't entitled — they just have more time to be themselves.

Read the whole story: NPR