

Kids Learn to Work Together Early, Study Finds

February 15, 2011

U.S. News & World Report (HealthDay):

Some adults may want to take a lesson from young who've demonstrated that even children at the early age of 3, children have a sense of what's fair, researchers say.

The study authors found that children shared with each other after working together to earn a reward, even in circumstances where it would have been easy for one child to keep all of the prize without sharing.

Read the whole story: U.S. News & World Report \(HealthDay\)