

Men who glare angrily when someone spills their pint are 'reverting to their caveman instinct'

March 01, 2011

The Daily Mail:

Men who stare angrily when someone spills their pint are reverting to a caveman instinct to dominate, according to scientists.

They are more likely to glare when they feel hard done by rather than seek to calm things down, a study said.

And to avoid trouble, it is probably better to buy them a drink than get involved in a staring match.

Read the whole story: The Daily Mail