

People with shifty eyes AREN'T dishonest... they're just thinking hard

July 19, 2012

The Daily Mail:

Shifty eyes have been thought to be a sign of disinterest or that a person is lying, but new evidence suggests the involuntary movement occurs when people try and access their long-term memory.

Psychology professor Howard Ehrlichman of Queens College, at City University of New York, made the claims in a recent article in the publication Current Directions in Psychological Science.

Read the whole story: The Daily Mail