

Diverse Perspectives: APS Convention

July 25, 2012

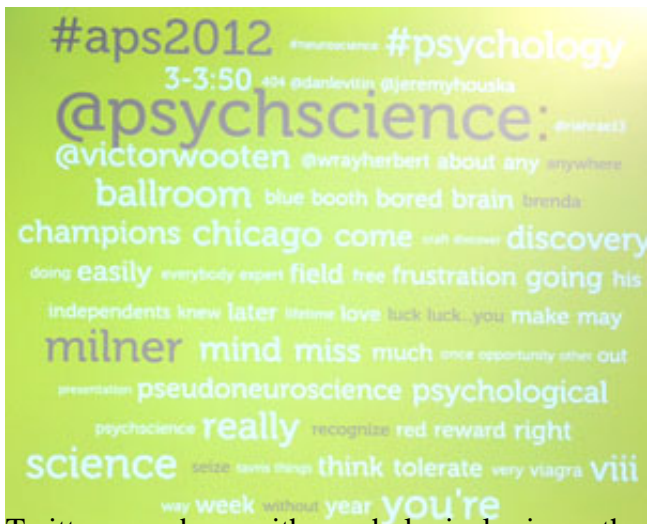

APS President Douglas L. Medin presents the James McKeen Cattell Fellow Award to distinguished autism researcher Geraldine Dawson.

Albert Bandura's original Bobo doll is a real hit in the Exhibit Hall, where attendees could also pose for photos with a faux Bo.

Melissa W. Riddle reminds prospective grant writers during a workshop on federal funding that it's good to have a sense of humor.

Twitter was abuzz with psychological science throughout the convention.

Dirk Helbing doesn't let conventions box him in during the Disaster, Response, and Recovery theme program.

Barry Schwartz captivates psychological scientists and their guests during the Bring the Family Address.

“The hope is that if autism can be detected early enough, interventions could reduce symptoms or even prevent the onset of the disorder,” says APS Past President Mahzarin R. Banaji as she introduces James McKeen Cattell Fellow Award recipient Geraldine Dawson.
