

Fellowship Opportunity: Dissertation Research in the Social and Behavioral Sciences

November 12, 2015

The National Institute of Justice, the scientific research arm of the Department of Justice, is looking for doctoral students with innovative research that aims to solve problems faced by criminal justice practitioners. The deadline to apply for a Social and Behavioral Science Graduate Research Fellowship (GRF) is December 15, 2015.

Academic institutions can submit applications on behalf of promising students in the final stages of their dissertation program, whose research is relevant to preventing and controlling crime and ensuring the fair and impartial administration of justice. Awarded applicants will receive up to $32,000 in stipend and research support.

We believe this opportunity might be of interest to your audiences, and we encourage you to share it with them. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Learn more about the Social and Behavioral Sciences Fellowship.

Read the full solicitation here.

For up-to-date information about NIJ's funding opportunities, subscribe to our email list.