The National Registry of Evidence-based Programs and Practices (NREPP) Seeks Quality of Research Reviewers

October 18, 2017

The National Registry of Evidence-based Programs and Practices (NREPP) is recruiting candidates to become certified reviewers tasked with rating the methodological quality and effectiveness of program evaluations.

Funded by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), NREPP is an evidence-based repository and review system providing reliable information on mental health and substance use interventions to the public.

NREPP reviewers assess the quality of research, methodological rigor, and reliability of outcomes of evaluation studies submitted to the NREPP review system. Eligible reviewers must possess a doctoral-level degree and a strong background in and understanding of current methods for evaluating prevention and treatment interventions. To become a reviewer, you must complete a reviewer skills matrix and pass an NREPP Certification Training Course.

Interested reviewers may submit a letter of interest and their curriculum vitae to NREPP Project Director Martha Yeide (myeide@dsgonline.com). Applications will be accepted on a rolling basis.

> For more information about NREPP and reviewer requirements, training, and responsibilities, click here.