

Making Sense of Self-Regulation in Early Childhood

July 24, 2015

The effect of parental supportive emotion socialization on internalizing symptoms (IS) in early childhood is moderated by child executive function (EF). For children with low EF, there is a negative relation between supportive behaviors and IS, but there is no relation for children with high EF.